Washington DC, [CapitalWirePR] –March 1, 2010--- With a redesigned web site featuring sleek visuals, The Washington Hispanic today launched a fresh new look on line. The Capital's largest Spanish language newspaper is now repositioning with a robust web presence to better serve its readers and the community at www.washingtonhispanic.com.

"The redesigned site has been in development for some time. Our community is seeking faster access and greater coverage to keep growing and prospering. Our readers want to stay informed. The Washington Hispanic intends to meet their news needs. Our news will now be even more timely and ever more relevant to our reader's interests," said founder Johnny A. Yataco.

"Since last fall, we have been analyzing what our readers say about our coverage and what they want in news. Now we're ready to provide multimedia content, more local stories, and easy to use interactive tools. This site reflects the Washington Hispanic Newspaper and our readers" Johnny A. Yataco went on to add. The new sections to be added to the site cover news from areas such as real estate, sports, entertainment, classifieds, automotive living and travel. The site will also have unique features such as the ability for individuals to place classified and display ads on line. A twitter section has also been added that allows viewers to follow the tweets of their favorite reporters.
