THE HONOREES

Diane Guerrero / Artistic Excellence and Activism

Diane Guerrero is an actress, author and activist known for starring as "Maritza Ramos" on Netflix's Orange Is The New Black, which led to three consecutive wins for the Screen Actors Guild Award for Outstanding Performance by an Ensemble in a Comedy Series. She currently stars as "Crazy Jane" in DC Comic's Doom Patrol, and as "Lina" in CW's break-out hit, Jane the Virgin.

Ms. Guerrero grew up in Boston and remained there when the rest of her family was deported to Colombia, after unsuccessfully pursuing legal citizenship. In 2015, she was named a White House Ambassador for Citizenship and Naturalization. She is an outspoken advocate for common sense, comprehensive immigration reform and has worked with Immigrant Legal Resource Center and Mi Familia Vota, a nonpartisan Latino civic engagement organization to promote citizenship and voter registration. She was also named one of Variety's "10 Latinos to Watch" in 2015, was recognized at the 2018 Phillip Burton Immigration & Civil Rights Awards for the work she continues to do.

Her memoir, entitled In the Country We Love: My Family Divided, was released by Henry Holt publishing in 2016. The memoir recounts the story of her parents being detained and deported when she was fourteen years old. She released her second book, My Family Divided, in 2018. Although similar to the first book, Ms. Guerrero tailored this one for a younger audience because she felt as if children who are now facing family separations have little knowledge of how to deal with it.

Marvin Weissberg/ Philanthropy in the Arts and Social Justice

Throughout his life—now into his tenth decade—Marvin Weissberg has been a keen, sympathetic observer of the human condition, a friend to those in need, and deeply engaged in his community and the world. Mr. Weissberg's worldview was shaped by his early years in Depression Era New York and war-time Washington, D.C. As a teenager in 1940's Washington, he encountered both the influx of energy and idealism of a world capital on war footing, and a provincial, racially stratified city. After graduating high school at 16, he enrolled in the University of Maryland for free (a privilege extended only to the District's white residents). At 18 he entered the Army, where he built bridges—and traveled the country—as the war had ended.

In 1953, Mr. Weissberg returned to DC and launched a career in real estate, where he was among the first to realize that Northern Virginia would play a central part in Washington's economic future. He also immersed himself in Washington's cultural, civic, and political life. He was a member of Theatre Lobby, Washington DC's first racially integrated theater, alongside students from Howard University. As an intrepid traveler and life-long learner, Mr. Weissberg's interests and commitments ranged beyond borders. A founding board member of The National Democratic Institute, he traveled the world as an election observer, building personal bonds with activists and political leaders. These experiences led to the development of the Weissberg Program in Human Rights at Beloit College by the Weissberg Foundation, which was established in 1998.

Mr. Weissberg established the Foundation to deepen his philanthropic efforts and enlarge their impact. As the Foundation enters its fourth decade, it strives to stay true to the deeply humane, humble, and fundamentally optimistic ethos that Mr. Weissberg continues to model.

Sonia Gutiérrez / Community and Education Leadership

Sonia Gutiérrez is President Emeritus and Founder of the Carlos Rosario International Public Charter School. For more than 43 years, she has been a principal, counselor, advocate, and organizer for more than 70,000 adult immigrant students. She began her career in 1972 in the DC Public Schools as a counselor in the Program for English Instruction to Latin Americans, where she became its Director, transforming the English as a Second Language program into a comprehensive adult education program. She merged the program with the Americanization School in 1974, relocated to the Gordon Junior High School in Georgetown in 1978, where it was renamed the Carlos Rosario Adult Education Center and operated until DC Public Schools eliminated all adult education programs in 1996. Ms. Gutiérrez reopened the school in 1997 as the Carlos Rosario International Career Center, which became the first Adult Public Charter School in the nation, expanding to six sites in the city by 2003. After completing an $18 million capital campaign, the sites were consolidated into its current facility on Harvard Street NW. Today with the additional Sonia Gutiérrez Campus in Northeast Washington, the Carlos Rosario International Public Charter School serves more than 2,500 students with English as a Second Language classes, a GED program in Spanish and English, and courses in information technology, citizenship, culinary arts, nurse aide, family literacy, and Spanish.

Among her many awards are the American Dream Medallion in Education from the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute; the Graciela Olivarez La Raza Award from Unidos US; and having the 500th block of V Street NE designated the Sonia Gutiérrez Campus Way by Mayor Muriel Bowser and the City Council.
